Introduction

The basis of a good conversation class is giving learners a reason and an opportunity to speak and scaffolding that speaking with lexis and grammatical structure as it is needed. The most fruitful conversations arise spontaneously and there is an art to listening well and asking the right questions in order to uncover the nuggets of universal interest which provoke stimulating classroom discussion. However, some days we come up empty handed, maybe our learners are tired or reluctant to publicly speak up. Here it is also the teacher's role to give learners a gentle push into areas which hopefully will create intellectual arousal and thus opportunities for the teacher to support this output with appropriate input.

About the materials

The activities in this book are intended to facilitate and support rich and stimulating conversation and are not designed to produce standardised lessons. Each unit contains many possible branching off points which can be either pursued in more depth or accepted at face value.

How to use the material

Give a copy of the activity page to each learner and have them read the quote and give their reaction to it. Then put them into pairs or small groups to try and unscramble the mixed up vocabulary items. After about 10 minutes, go through the answers together.

Next have learners look at the idioms and collocations section. Feel free to go off-track as questions arise from the presented language. Maybe they have similar idioms in their own language, maybe they find the construction unusual or funny. Make it clear that it's not mandatory that learners are able to reproduce each of these idioms, but that understanding and inferring meaning is the main goal of the activity. If learners have questions about grammar you can address them in depth or stress that the main focus of this section is understanding and move on.

The grammar bit is deliberately located at the bottom of the page so it can be easily omitted from photocopies if you think it's unsuitable for the class. This section is not designed to lead into full grammar instruction but is intended to expose the student to a grammatical structure that might be useful in the conversational part of the lesson. This section also serves to reassure learners that explicit grammar learning is being represented

It is of course possible to segue into a longer, more structured grammar explanation at this (or any other) point if it feels appropriate. One way to work with the grammar bit is to have learners copy the grammatical structure but change the context - either through putting an example sentence on the board and having the class suggest transformations, or asking learners to create their own grammatically similar sentences either individually or in pairs.

The last part of the class is the free conversation stage. Give groups of learners a deck of shuffled question cards placed face down on the table in front of them. You may choose to pre-teach any vocabulary you think might be unfamiliar at this point, or alternatively let the groups attempt to uncover meaning for themselves (or ask for your help).

Learners take it in turns to turn over the top card and ask their question to the other group members. The questions should be asked to each member in turn in order to give everyone a chance to speak but spontaneous group discussion shouldn't be discouraged. Be on hand to take notes and help out where needed. Finally, when the conversations are dying out, or after a specified time limit, go over anything interesting you heard during the activity and ask groups what other information they found out during their conversations. Further discussion may well spring up again during this final stage.
