

Problems with the project

We're well over budget on this project, we need to take the _____ by the horns and get these costs down.

We have to stop hiding our _____ in the sand. This is going to be a problem, and we need to face up to it.

We're right on schedule and ready to launch. There are a few bugs to _____ out but nothing that should cause any big problems.

The launch went really well. There were a few _____ problems but that's only to be expected.

The project manager made some bad decisions, but as usual he managed to pass the _____ and blame his team for not working hard enough.

The project started off really well, it was only when the lead developer left the company that things started to go _____-shaped.

I know we've run into a few difficulties recently, but we need to get back on _____ and make sure we hit these milestones.

track buck pear heads bull iron teething

Do you have any similar idioms in your own language?